HHS	Community Health Fees

HHS	The Community Health Centers establishes its fees based on a Resource-Based Relative Value (RBRVS) methodology. The RBRVS methodology is the industry standard by which providers and payors establish, modify, and maintain provider fee schedules. The RBRVS methodology was established by Medicare, in conjunction with the American Medical Association (AMA) and the Specialty Practice Boards, in 1992. The methodology consists of two components - relative value units (RVUs) and conversion factors. The charge for specific service is calculated as follows: Relative Value Units (RVUs) are established annually by the AMA for every medical/surgical procedure. The unit values assigned to each service reflects the relative value of the resources required to provide that specific service in comparison to all other services. Resources consist of physician time, practice expense, and malpractice costs. For example, a procedure that has a RVU value of 2.0 would typically require twice the resources for a different procedure that has a RVU value of 1.0. The RVU values are adjusted annually by the AMA based on annual reviews and recommendations of experts in each medical speciality. Conversion Factors are decided upon by each provider agency based on its specific cost structure. Medicare annually announces the conversion factor that it will use to calculate the amount it will pay for services. Commercial insurance payors typically use the conversion factor as the basis of negotiating with medical groups for determining contractual payment terms. The RVU's and conversion factor are used as follows to determine the specific charges for each procedure: Charge for a Procedure = (# of RVU's for that procedure) X (Conversion Factor). The Community Health Center uses a conversion factor of $47.51. The RVU values can be found on the Medicare website (July 2011) at: http://www.cms.gov/PhysicianFeeSched/PFSRVF/list.asp?sortByDID=1a&submit=Go&filterType=none&filterByDID=99&sortOrder=ascending&intNumPerPage=10
